USING WOOD SCRAP.

Tag Ends Left From Big Work Not Wasted Nowadays.

From the Woodworker.

In these days of high-priced lumber the utilization of the small pieces of wood formerly considered of little or no value assumes considerable importance.

Brush manufacturers have made some headway in using waste from furniture factories, but the pieces are of so many sizes and of such irregular shapes that success has been only partial. A small piece of wood, however, is of great value in the interior framework of various chairs, sideboards and similar articles.

Wheelwrights save the ends out from wheels and shafts and make them into small boxes and other small tool handles. Wagon builders occasionally make a use of scraps of hardwoods for fitting brakeblocks. Saw and blind makers save their scraps for the match factories, or if the pieces are large enough they are skinned into corner blocks, rose blocks and balusters.

Coppers repurposed broken or defective stoves, but the pieces are of so many sizes and of such irregular shapes that success has been only partial. A small piece of wood, however, is of great value in the interior framework of various chairs, sideboards and similar articles.

Some of the makers on interior finish work the ends of lumber into small boxes and the hardwood scrapers are made into parquet flooring. Planing mills work scraps and broken pieces, suitable in that form, into boxes and plates, medicines and other articles, and into brackets, balusters, rose blocks and small quarter-round molding.
